

The end of net neutrality, as being pushed by the FCC, is a dagger pointed at the heart of the internet and the modern American economy. One doesn't have to look far to see the results in Portugal and New Zealand and note that in the more internet based American economy will result in inevitable mass firings as the content providers, the reason the internet exists as it does, are driven out of business. This is madness.

Sam Cook